About Co-operation Ireland

Building on the promise of 1998, the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement transformed life in Britain and Ireland over the past 25 years and created the space for the subsequent generations to build on those achievements.

Co-operation Ireland has been at the forefront of strengthening societal relationships since then which despite difficulties, have weathered many storms.

The principles of dialogue and mutual respect continue to be the basis on how we solve our problems in Northern Ireland.

We are committed to continuing this work by bringing young people together through our Future Leaders Programme and spreading our experience beyond our shores to promote peace; an experience that has never been more relevant across the world. The charity must turn its attention to the next 25 years and give our young people their place to lead us into a sustainable peaceful future.
